Macro and Flows Tracker

Stay Vigilant

As fiscal spending reached 48% of the state budget in July, the pace of fiscal expansion appears to be progressing slowly with July's surplus of IDR 153tn was still slightly higher than Junes. This underscores the rising expectation for an increased level of fiscal spending, to invigorating momentum in consumption growth. Additionally, the political landscape is in motion as we approach the presidential registration deadline in October. July witnessed growth in AUM for Fixed Income and Mixed asset classes, experiencing respective increases of 4.0% and 5.8% m-m, while Equity class exhibited further moderation while the cash level saw a slight increase at 7.4%.

Elevated fiscal surplus. Fiscal surplus remains elevated in July at IDR1.35tn stemmed from revenue of IDR206.9tn (-3.6% y-y) and expenditure of IDR 205.5tn (2.8% y-y). On cumulative basis, overall government revenue reached IDR1,614.8tn (+4.1% y-y) and expenditure of IDR 1,461.2tn (1.2% y-y) in 7M23, resulting in surplus of IDR153tn, slightly higher than June's level. With cumulative spending still representing only 48% of the state budget, the pace of fiscal expansion seems to be progressing slowly. There is a growing anticipation for heightened fiscal spending, particularly to stimulate momentum in consumption growth.

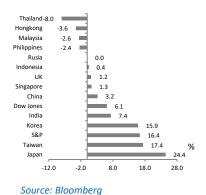

Given the current circumstances, there are two critical areas that warrant caution: 1. The risk of upward inflation due to El-Nino, which has the potential to impact rice prices. Moreover, recent cuts in oil production have driven an increase in Brent prices; and 2. The risk of reduced consumption. Despite the positive recent consumption data, including a 6.9% year-on-year growth in retail sales for July 2022, there are indications that consumer confidence is diminishing. Confidence in job availability and income is on the decline, necessitating proactive measures. In our assessment, considering the present fiscal capacity, the government possesses ample resources to address both these risks. Failure to accelerate fiscal measures could further reduce supply risks, with an expectation of completing SBN (Government Securities) auctions ahead of the original schedule. Reduced supply from government auctions could also contribute to lower yields in the future.

Upside risk to inflation. Amidst the El-Nino phenomenon, rice prices have exhibited a steady increase during August, owing to a noticeable reduction in stock within the rice central market. In April 2023, prices had stabilized at IDR 12,000/kg (8% ytd increase), but with the emergence of El Nino concerns in July, prices resumed their ascent. As of mid August, the average national rice price went up to IDR 13,570/kg. While prices in Java remain at IDR12k/kg, the price have escalated to IDR18k/kg in Central Borneo. Rising rice prices would have considerable risk to the ongoing disinflationary process, given its substantial weighting contribution to inflation of 3.33%.

In our view, the government is well-equipped to step in and stabilize prices using its reserves. At present, the government's rice reserve stands at 800ktonnes, c.30% of the monthly national demand of 2.4 to 2.5m tonnes, and still surpassing the 20% buffer threshold. The government is confidence to meet its 2.2m tons reserves target by end of 2023. The Ministry of Trade has also indicated its readiness to issue another import quota, if necessary, while the current import quota of 2m tonnes has been utilized c. 1.7m. We also note rising stock level observed in the Cipinang Rice Central Market (PIBC) in Aug.

The political landscape is in motion. Drawing insights from the outcomes of the nine most recent political surveys carried out between June and July, three contenders maintain their positions as frontrunners as the October's presidential registration approaches. Calculated from the average of these nine surveys, Prabowo Subianto takes the lead with 38% backing, closely trailed by Ganjar Pranowo with 33%, and Anies Baswedan securing 22%. In these surveys, Prabowo achieves his highest electability rating of 42.3%, while Ganjar reaches a peak of 37.4%. (Exh. 18 for more details) This scenario is likely to stimulate heightened activity, particularly from PDI-P, the largest party supporting Ganjar, to narrow the gap

Leveraging core strengths

Revising TBIG future earnings, we see the conditions are fitting to TBIGs strengths, building new sites for telcos and laying the groundwork for future growth on sound fundamentals. We feel TBIG is an ideal partner to build digital infrastructure with new fiber revenue depicting encouraging traction. We roll-forward our valuation, and reiterate BUY call with new TP: IDR2,500.

Key takeaways from 2Q23. TBIG 2Q23 revenue grew to Rp1.66tn (+2.7%qoq) with non-tower revenue making impact. 2Q23 TBIG EBITDA margin was stronger 87.2% (+100 bps). On YTD basis, TBIG 1H23 revenue came in flattish Rp3.28tn with EBITDA margin 86.7%. TBIG 1H23 net profit was reported lower at Rp689bn (-16.6%yoy) on higher non-operating items and tax which we adjust in our forecast.

TBIG core competence is in building new sites. In the last 2 years, TBIG has built close to 1,300 Built-to-Suit B2S sites on annual basis. We think TBIG relied predominantly in organic growth compared to peers. YTD 1H23 TBIG built so far 266 gross sites but we expect many more sites will be deployed in 2H23 and book over +1,000 new sites into our new forecast. We expect tenancy ratio to remain above the level of 1.88x in 2Q23, (latest high 1.98x in 1Q21) with deployment also of collocations potentially from all telcos. We take into account potential new tenancy churns as telcos (mainly IOH) optimize coverage and capacity between Java and ex-Java. The outlook remains positive as TBIG develops new revenue stream in non-tower business at the moment with promising traction.

We expect buoyant B2S demand. Key client IOH has only spent 33% of its capex budget in 2023. Telkomsel and XL Axiata also spent less than 50% of their 2023 budget, but telcos are committed to absorb the full FY23 budget. We expect TBIG to benefit in 2H23 for telco network rollouts in coverage & capacity. Even if new telco spectrum is auctioned we expect telcos to continue rollout amid network densification needs.

Fundamentals to monetize the growth. TBIG EBITDA margin was resilient in 2021-22 over 86%+ during large B2S rollouts. We expect total debt to remain at the Rp29tn level; TBIG latest new IDR bond issuance Rp1.5tn is competively priced at 5.90-6.25%, and at that level we expect TBIG net profit to grow sustainably in the future.

Thinking about the future. Share price has long devalued from Rp3,200 when shares were sold to Bersama Digital Infrastructure Asia BDIA as quoted in news media. TBIG will continue do share buybacks we think, firstly to support shareholder value, and secondly any resulted treasury shares can be sold to parent BDIA or other investor who wish to participate in digital infra projects.

TBIG gateway for seamless network integrations. ICT trends suggest that the data traffic will be flown more eventually through large and edge data centers with data traffic generated through static environments and between fixed networks and mobile RAN. The investor proposition is attractive with TBIG owning the 3rd largest tower portfolio with the largest tenancy ratio. TBIG and BDIA have the runway to build and deliver seamless network integrations for telcos to be running through TBIG sites. This can be achieved with more fiber connectivity between sites, core network and data centers. The 1H23 figures encourage our theory with TBIG developing fiber revenue stream.

Reiterate BUY. We roll forward our DCF with our latest assumptions on tenancies supported by network build-outs in ex-Java, as well as latest trends in churn and lease rates. New revenue with fiber broadens TBIG horizons with little impact in EBITDA margin so far. We arrive at new TP: IDR2,500, implies 13.6x 2023 EV/EBITDA, little over its 5yr mean, lower than its 3yr mean.
